

Nicole Evelina is an accomplished speaker, having presented at national and regional writing conferences - including the Missouri Writer's Guild Conference, Historical Novel Society North American Conference, and Chanticleer Author's Conference - both on panels and teaching solo. She's also spoken to groups ranging from hundreds of high school students to 50+ library patrons and small writers' groups on topics from historical women to all elements of writing historical fiction and romance.

Nicole is also the author of five books, which have won more than 20 awards, including two Book of the Year designations. Her writing has appeared in The Huffington Post, The Philadelphia Inquirer, The Independent Journal, Curve Magazine and numerous historical publications. She is one of only six authors who completed a week-long writing intensive taught by #1 New York Times bestselling author Deborah Harkness. In addition, Nicole has traveled around the world to research her novels, consulting with internationally recognized historical authorities.